A Study in School

Stoically I drift through a labyrinth

of people

fearing life

death

and The Bell

meanwhile my body is decomposing

Poems by Sally Heuer

osing

and i think about What It Means

But you are not here any more They forced you to go
boring bleeding tunnels
through your head
which you may never recover from
and now they are working on me

CRY

Poems by Julie Olson

forlorn as smallness envelopes your mind and a strangeness engulfs your being.
yet you live breathing the air and never can sigh for your next breath is not whole.
through the window life flows and through your eyes passes love all around but understanding doesn't come and dreams are your life and you are not real.

for you see all as you imagine and you are not all knowledge that knows your eyes are limited.
And you still live and cannot understand why It's so small and tight. You're stifled into awareness
and cry.

perhaps i'll fly
towards a field
in spring and
meet you standing
above ground
and cry
upon you to come
and follow.

The sun.
Beautiful, isn't it?
It shines on the lovely green
gardens
And spreads its light
over golden wheat fields,
And blue flax,
And Vietnam.

A Hope for Peace

SON OF A DANIEL BOONE

I have come to chase a dog named Pinko out of his doghouse in the mountains.
I have come with pictures of Raquel Welch and Robert Kennedy, in my wallet.
I have come to prove the hippies wrong for God is really on my side.
For I am the Son of a Daniel Boone and if I blush, it's just the hot sun upon my face.
And my musket is
cocked
and set to shoot
in the proudest American tradition I follow daddy's footsteps with a real Blazing trail that everyone can see
for at least one second.
I have come to
Remember Saigon
And forget about Watts, Chicago, and Harlem.

--Jeff Holman
